Color-coded for patient identification

Color-Coded ID Wrist Bands For Patient Safety

Poor communication is a key contributing factor to healthcare errors.¹ One way to improve communication is by placing color-coded wristbands on patients to alert caregivers to common safety factors such as allergies and fall risk. A standardized color coding system provides a continuous communication link within an organization as well as between other healthcare facilities when patients are transferred.

Movement toward a national standard of color-coded patient wristbands gained momentum in 2005 after a hospital patient in Pennsylvania nearly died because a clinician incorrectly identified the patient with a yellow wristband. The clinician thought yellow stood for “restricted extremity,” as it did at another hospital where she also worked. At this hospital, however, yellow meant “do not resuscitate,” and when the patient coded, she was nearly not resuscitated because of the yellow wristband.²

The three most commonly used color codes

 = Patient allergies

 = Fall risk

 = Do not resuscitate (DNR)

“Because patient misidentification is identified as a root cause of many errors, the Joint Commission listed improving patient identification accuracy as the first of its National Patient Safety Goals introduced in 2003, and this continues to be an accreditation requirement.”³

States with Standardized Wristband Colors⁴

More than 30 states have adopted standardized color coding for patient wristbands.

Seven Ways to Maximize the Use of Color-Coded Wristbands¹

- 1 Use colored wristbands with the alert pre-printed on them (e.g., “fall risk”).
- 2 Remove any “social cause” wristbands from patients to avoid confusion.
- 3 Remove patient wristbands that were applied at another facility.
- 4 Place bands on patients at admission, when their condition changes or when new information is received during the patient’s stay.
- 5 Explain to patients the meaning behind colored wristbands.
- 6 Color-coordinate the patient chart, white board, care plan, door signage and any stickers with the same color as the wristband.
- 7 Train staff to verify patient color-coded wristbands upon assessment, at handoff of care and during transfers within the facility.

Blood ID Bands

Medline's blood band is ideal for your facility's type and cross-match procedures. These bands ensure a positive match between the patient, the sample, the cross-matched units, and other related paperwork. Each blood band features a unique identifying number that is specific to the patient. The band is made of a comfortable yet durable material and has an easy-to-read information area. Each band has 24 labels for sample identification and an adhesive peel off tail that applies directly to the draw tube. Available in red, yellow and green with a one-time snap closure.
